I am a novice with IP networks. I have read through a lot of tutorials and other answers that we have received on this site. I do not understand why a packet does not actually have an IP header on the frame. Let me start with an example: Suppose I use my computer at home to communicate with my computer at work. I am using a router, say the Linksys WRT54G wireless router, at home. I am using it to send a packet from my computer at home to my computer at work. I establish a wireless connection using my laptop at home to my router at home, and I place the laptop outside the house. I connect the LAN of the Linksys router f678ea9f9e
